Uncategorized, I know but I'm just so over it… Oh I missed that, but I'm not sure it's only that for some people, it is or it isn't… I don't know, it's just that sometimes, the need for a second opinion says volumes. I like to think of myself as a fairly open-minded person, and I am usually but I think first impressions are important. It doesn't matter what you think, it matters what YOU think. Have you ever talked to someone who seems stuck up, full of themselves, always criticizing whatever they don't know, no matter what your opinion is? They always have some reason for why they think you are wrong. Not just wrong, as in what you think makes no sense, wrong in the sense of arrogant and stuck up. Yep, that's me. I don't know how this will help or not, but I will tell you that I'm more open minded than I let on. I like to look at things differently and I guess it is at least partly because of my lack of exposure to beauty industry types in the past. When I was younger I used to make my own clothes for myself (gasp, I know) and my mum and a few friends and I would get together to go shopping and try on each other's clothes and see how they looked. I guess that's the most I had to go by. Last Christmas I had a visit from my older brother (he only visits after he has a child, I never even had a boyfriend to visit, just friends, although many of whom, now become 'friends', even knew me before I gave birth! Fyi, this is not bragging!

it's a confession!) and I was in London visiting him. The last time he saw me before this visit was when he visited in December last year, where I told him that after being with my BF for over 6 months, I finally had the courage to tell my family. I have had a really weird relationship with my family, my Mum and Dad are estranged and I have not been back to see them for years. My Mum and I are on good terms but as soon as I find the words to explain my situation, they drop the hammer on me and tell me I am a bad daughter, I have disappointed them, I have What's New in the Photoshop CC?

There are a number of options that allow you to apply a variety of effects to text. These include, : Font Details Change the font of an entire document with one command. Find & Replace Find and replace text, delete text, add text, or change the case of a block of text. Text Wrap Let text flow automatically to the right, left, and center. Text Auto Color

Change the color of text automatically depending on what's in the background. Transform Effects Transform text in a variety of ways. Highlights Highlights highlight areas of the image for special effects. Note: These are effects that are frequently used by designers and photographers. Photoshop is not a replacement for a good image editor! Using the History Can be used to undo or redo edits, apply or remove a filter, or undo various changes to an image. Viewing History Enable the History panel by choosing Window from the View menu. Using the Filter Panel Select Filter > Filter Gallery > Blur > Gaussian Blur. Using the Layer Panel Create a new layer by pressing Command/Ctrl + N. Using the Control Panel Click on the control panel tab by choosing Window from the View menu. Using the Crop Tool The Crop tool is found on the Tools panel or in the Tools > Crop box. There are two main uses for the crop tool. One is to remove portions of an image. The other is to move, resize, and rotate an image. Drag a selection boundary or feature on the image, such as a line or circle. Photoshop will automatically crop the image to your selected boundary. Now let's examine how to use the Crop tool to make an image larger or smaller. In the example below I will be cropping a photo: To crop an image click on the Crop tool. The tool will be added to your toolbox. Choose one of the options in the right-hand area. To make the image larger: drag the boundary inward. To make the image smaller: drag the boundary outward. The new size will be reflected when you click OK. Now let's examine how to use the
