To assess the efficacy and safety of lacosamide in children with monosymptomatic nocturnal epilepsy, we conducted an open-label study in which 7 children (aged 3-15 years) with symptomatic seizures arising from focal cortical dysplasia (FCD) or tuberous sclerosis complex (TSC) were treated with lacosamide. The dose of lacosamide ranged from 40 to 120 mg/kg per day. Lacosamide treatment was initiated at a dose of 40 mg/kg per day and continued for 8-10 weeks. All 7 patients experienced a > 50% seizure reduction. Five patients reported a > 50% reduction in seizure frequency and became seizure free. Two of the 7 patients remained on lacosamide treatment as monotherapy. The mean lacosamide dose at the end of the study was 60 mg/kg per day. The most common adverse events observed during the study were gastrointestinal in nature and reversible. There was no tendency to over- or underdosing. Thus, lacosamide appears to be a safe and effective agent for the treatment of severe epilepsy with decreased frequency.Wedmore, Devon, England — A black bear has died after it was hit by a car as it wandered along the road, it has emerged. The animal was hit by a Mazda just after 6 p.m. on Friday in the village of Wedmore in southern England. "We've had bears out in the field quite a few times," Bob Poulson, a member of the public, told the local Plymouth Herald.
